Why Littering is a Problem

JOURNALIST - Y9b

Images
Of Littering

More than two million pieces of litter are dropped every single day in the UK and some people still class it as "not a problem".

There is even legal actions now including clearing up litter, paying a fine all the way up to 2'500 and not paying the fine can also escalate to court.

Most people see littering as something minor but trash and rubbish break down over time and it floats into the water, soil and fresh water sources.

If you were wondering

Paper and cardboard takes 2 to 6 weeks.

Cotton t-shirts take 2 to 6 months.

Plastic bags take 500 years all the way up to forever.

Plastic bottles take 450 years too 500+.

Car Tires take 2000 years and up.

If you keep reporting litter your area will feel and look cleaner. The air may also seem fresher.

"If you litter the future is bitter"

- conservation slogan

Litter also infects our wildlife and their habitats.

Over 1 million animals die each year from ingesting or becoming trapped in plastic and fishing litter. Common hazards include chocking on items like Styrofoam fragments and getting caught in discarded containers.

If you would like to help, contact your local council or call 0800 80 70 60 for bigger items or fly tipping. Your council will have to help you no matter what. If enough people report littering the council will be forced to do something to stop it. You could make a grassroots program called "don't ruin your planet" which the council shall run with volunteers to put an end to littering by catching litters and placing more bins in public places.
