

GW shone brightly on Saturday evening, bringing magic to the Kendal Torchlight procession. Having poured creative energy into crafting pieces for the parade's enchanting "winter" section, which was part of this year's "seasons" theme, GW helped light up the night with their stunning artistry.

The Kendal Torchlight spectacle set out to ignite the streets for its 55th anniversary, building on a vibrant legacy that began in 1970. While the event has evolved over the decades, its heart remains a captivating community celebration, free and open to all. This extraordinary tradition, created entirely by the people of Kendal, invites everyone to join in the radiant festivity and be part of its storied history

In a truly show-stopping moment, GW's parade piece faced a sudden technical hiccup. But in the heat of the moment, the Whinfell Staff proved their problem-solving skills. With some quick thinking and impressive improvisation, the team seamlessly swapped out the display, allowing GW to triumphantly continue the procession with an alternative masterpiece. It was a powerful display of resilience and creativity, showcasing the spirit and talent of the team when faced with an unexpected obstacle.

Not even the relentless rain could dampen GW's vibrant spirit at the Kendal Torchlight procession. Undeterred by the long, damp walk, GW proudly showcased their craftsmanship and positivity. Their infectious enthusiasm brought smiles to the faces of the community, proving that a little creativity and a lot of heart can triumph over any downpour
